

lean and white—these are iconic characteristics of beach style.

But how do you translate these characteristics into a home that is warm, cozy and livable all year long? In a historic Watch Hill, Rhode Island, beach cottage, designer Elena Philips created a space that draws from the simplicity and peacefulness of the ocean, but is practical and livable enough for the owners' two young children, two golden retrievers and the guests they entertain while spending summer weekends and holidays at the shore.

|TOP LEFT| ENLIGHTENED PAST. The Watch Hill cottage is a historic home. A Restoration Hardware lamp illuminates the plaque.

|TOP RIGHT| OLD AND NEW. The door's original hardware stands out against blue paint.

|RIGHT| BY THE BOOK. Elena loves book spines and the way they add color to a room's décor. She buys books that complement the room's colors or whose subject relates to the home or the owners' interests. She stays away from black or red-spined books that often look too harsh.

|ABOVE| COLOR POPS. An assortment of cookbooks and a fun print of frozen pops from the Longstreet Collection add color to the simple and chic white kitchen.

|RIGHT| COLOR AND TEXTURE.

Cabinets feature a custom paint color from Farrow and Ball, and the walls feature a raffia wall covering of natural fibers from Kneedler Fauchére. The scalloped tile backsplash is a standout feature that is a fun nod to coastal style.

RETAINING HISTORY

Homeowners Katie and Brian McCormack started off renting the historic cottage but loved it so much they bought it when it went up for sale shortly afterward. Brian had grown up in the area and had family nearby. Designated a historic home, the cottage was built in 1897. The McCormacks' intended small-scale renovation of the property turned into a three-year project, in which they added to the porch and created a mudroom, a laundry room, and a basement that included a playroom, workout room and bathroom. But the McCormacks wanted to keep the bones of the historic home and play up its best features—diamond-pane windows and the porch with its lovely views. Inside, the design carries the same spirit. "We didn't want to detract," Elena says.

PRACTICAL PRIORITIES

To give your beach home year-round appeal, comfort and practicality are key. "You have to know what you're interested in, what kind of person you are," Elena says. Is cleanliness a top priority? How often will you entertain? Knowing how you're going to live in your home allows you to accommodate what's important at every step. Elena wanted to take into account the sand that would be tracked in by small children and dogs. She painted the floors, making them easier to maintain, and slipcovered white furniture. Children and guests can come and go from the beach, and the home has an "indoor-outdoor feel." Furnishings are casual. "Nothing is too precious," Elena says.

august | september 2016 89

|ABOVE| PRACTICAL AND PLAYFUL. In the girls' bedroom,

durable raffia headboards can be wiped clean, and a brightpink color palette adds whimsical charm.

YEAR-ROUND BEACH STYLE

An open, airy atmosphere is an important characteristic of beachside style, and maintaining visual flow and removing divisions between rooms help achieve this look. Elena carried the white from the floors up the walls and maintained a uniform palette across the rooms. She used colors and images suggestive of the ocean throughout, like the light watery blue on the furniture and in the master bedroom, and an abstract painting that suggests the ocean in the kitchen. "You want to create a language that's consistent," Elena says.

She suggests diverging from the palette only in areas like the dining or powder rooms, where stronger statements are appropriate, and where you can use bolder versions of the hues carried throughout the home. Elena introduced yellow and a brighter, deeper blue in the dining room, as well as bright wallpaper in the powder room. Along with maintaining the visual flow of the home for an airier, more open look, Elena made sure the physical space flowed well too, and removed part of the wall between the kitchen and dining room to create more space.

